- Lost in the all of the media attention surrounding the CCPA is the fact that Washington state has updated its data protection laws in multiple ways.

Behavioral Ethics: The Psychology of Moral Behavior

Sven Peterson

Vice President, Compliance, Ethics &
Regulatory Services, Premier Blue Cross

Werner De Bondt

Professor of Finance (emeritus), Richard H.
Driehaus College of Business, DePaul University

- How do individuals make ethical choices? We consider the psychological processes that result in ethical decisions and behavior. Our focus is on actual human conduct rather than a priori normative principles elaborated by intellectuals throughout history.
- We also ask how social institutions, e.g., law or regulatory and corporate policies, influence moral functioning. Their effects are often counterproductive.
- Lastly, we explore behavioral interventions (validated by insights from psychology) that foster ethical behavior and have the potential to bring about a culture of service and purpose. We offer examples within a corporate/organizational setting, e.g., nudges that preserve freedom of choice, yet tweak behavior.
